East Germany exported precision and optical instruments, machine tools, bicycles, motorcycles, drugs, especially penicillin, electrode plates for electric furnaces, pilot balloons. The unfulfilled 1951 orders were delivered by Fast Germany in 1952.

√f. The 1952 trade agreement signed early in 1952 provided for delivery of goods from both countries amounting to approximately 200 million rubles.

In May 1953, a trade agrees ont was signed in Berlin which provided for Fast German exports to China amounting to 225 million rubles and Fast German imports from China amounting to about 190 million rubles. East Germany agreed to deliver the same goods as in previous years; China's deliveries were to consist of egg powder, tea, tobacco, molybderum ore and the following:

Soya beans 125,000 tons Peanut oil 25,000 tons Rice 6,000 tons Tungaten ore 200 tons

The China Export Corporation, 112 Leipziger Street, Berlin, is also connected with the Chira export-import trade. This corporation is subsidized by the SED and is charged with procuring hard-to-get material for the Chinese from the Test, such as high quality steel, thin metal plate and shipbuilding plate, boring tools and chemicals. The cost of these iters is to be financed through the export of Chinese projucts. The Chinese, however, have always been dissatisfied with this corporation, as it has always shown a loss. The 1952 deficit amounted to 50 million rubles which is reported to have been shared equally by East Gernany and China.

- h. East Germany currently owes Mussia about 400 million rubles for goods delivered by Russia, of which 385 million rubles are owed on 1952 deliveries. Mast Germany pays interest at 2 percent on this debt.
- i. Provision for the exchange of goods and commodities amounting to 350 million rubles above and beyond the amounts provided for in the 1953 East German-Russian trade agreement are reportedly contained in a supplementary secret trade agreement.
- Between 10 June and 16 June 1953, a report circulated in the linistry for Foreign and Domestic Trade that the Russians were prepared to export food to East Germany amounting to 500 million rubles. Fertinent desks in the ministry were commissioned to draw up lists of food items and consumer goods needed in East Germany. In May the Russians had requested a list of consumer goods which East Germany could deliver on short notice.
